International Baccalaureate

In the spring of 1985 Mission Viejo High School became the first Orange County school to be accepted into the prestigious International Baccalaureate Diploma program. This program, based in Geneva, Switzerland, with North American Headquarters in New York City, allows students to earn an internationally recognized diploma. Students participating in this “school within a school” must complete an intense course of study, including a special course in “Theory of Knowledge,” which requires a 4,000 word thesis on a subject of each student’s special interest, and culminates in six internationally graded exams. Additionally, students must create reflective journals for their required creative, athletic, and social service activity.

For their efforts, students in the program may receive college credit for each exam passed. Additionally, because the students must become proficient in six academically demanding areas, including a foreign language, they also hold a distinct advantage in gaining admission to the college of their choice.

The program was originally begun in 1962 to unify the educational demands on all European students, and to recognize academic scholars. Canada soon followed Europe’s lead, and by 1974, the Ford Foundation had introduced the program to the United States.

Why enter the IB?

- IB presents students with a challenging and stimulating program.
- IB emphasizes the philosophy of applied knowledge rather than mere book learning.
- IB involves students in an interdisciplinary education with “global” perspective.
- IB rewards students for being well-rounded and civically responsible.
- IB enhances the students’ chances for admittance to the universities of their choice as well as earns advanced placement credit, (including up to 30 units in the U.C. system.)

Who is eligible for IB?

Although academic excellence is certainly an essential criteria, success in the program also depends to a great degree on motivation and character. Therefore, students applying to the program should possess the dedication required to complete a rigorous, four-year program marked by conceptual thinking, creative expression, and writing across the curriculum.
